

Combinatorial Problems in Infrastructure Planning

M. Grötschel¹

Abstract: Planning infrastructure (such as a public transport, a telephone, a railroad, or a pipeline network) is a highly complex process, unfortunately, mostly treated on a "political level" only. In this lecture I will outline some of the combinatorial optimization problems arising in infrastructure planning and show what one can do, from mathematical point of view, to improve the planning process.

¹ Technische Universität Berlin
Konrad-Zuse-Zentrum für Informationstechnik (ZIB)
Matheon
Takustrasse 7, 14195 Berlin
Germany
groetschel@zib.de